即学即用

As is known to all, cultural relics belong to human beings rather than individuals, and they are considered a bridge from modern to ancient times, so they are well worth protecting. In the long history of humans, some cultural relics were lost, especially during a time when two countries were at war. Finding all of them calls for time and money. It remains a big problem for the government.

However, some people are in search of them, and take possession of them illegally. Some of relics have been destroyed while only a few survive, which make them even more valuable. Therefore, every one of us should take great pains to protect them from damage. Happily, there are also those who are devoted to searching for lost cultural relics at the cost of time and money and asked for nothing in return. But they think it all worth it. They truly make contributions to the protection of cultural relics, and they are worthy of being highly thought of.

There is no doubt that cultural relics can serve as a reminder of history. After all, forgetting history is terrible. With joint efforts of the government and relic-protectors, more cultural relics are bound to be preserved.
