Announcement for Medical Emergency Drill

Aimed at preparing students for medical emergencies that may arise, a medical emergency drill is scheduled to be conducted on the school playground this Friday from 3 p.m. to 4 p.m. All students and staff members are required to participate.

During the drill, a medical emergency situation will be stimulated, where the participants will act either as first aiders or victims. The focus will be on providing basic first aid for victims before emergency services arrive, such as CPR and Heimlich maneuver, which can mean the difference between life and death.

Please note that all the participants must follow the instructions of the emergency personnel. Thank you for your cooperation.

One possible version:

I turned to see all the other patients following me. A bit puzzled, I went to my car and slid into the driver's seat. One of them called "Pop your hood!" So I pressed the button. Several others bent forward, most probably leaning in to check the engine. "The screw is loose," one assured me, "Trust me. I used to be a mechanic". Having fetched the tool from his car, he began to twist it. It was not long before he straightened up to rest, rubbing his back. Unexpectedly, the other patients just volunteered to take his turn despite their own health condition. When the "mechanic" gave a thumbs-up, everyone called out together, "Try it now!"

I said a quick prayer and turned the key. The engine turned over immediately. A cheer went up. Several hands shut the hood. "Don't make any stops on the way home," the "mechanic" said. "Keep the car running till the battery gets a good charge." I backed my car out of the space, then paused to wave at the crowd of people who'd saved the day. My Honda never stalled again. It turns out that my waiting room team had done a better job than my garage ever did. I guess that's just what happens when people come together. And there's no better valentine than that.
