Two are reported dead and ten others are missing after rain storms in southwest China's Sichuan Province. Local authorities say the heavy rains from Friday to Saturday have caused landslides, mud-rock flow and floods and damaged water conservancy, power, and telecommunication facilities, in affected areas. More rains are predicted in parts of Sichuan over the next five days. The National Meteorological Center says strong cold air will hit north China in the next two days, bringing heavy rainfall to the region, while hot weather will continue in the south. The cold air will arrive between Monday and Tuesday from Mongolia and cause temperature drops and heavy rains in most parts of north China, with downpours hitting some areas. Meanwhile, the center maintained the blue high-temperature alert Sunday, forecasting that temperatures will quickly rise above 35 degrees Celsius in east of Sichuan, parts of Chongqing, and Guangdong and Hubei and most areas south of the Yangtze River.
