Rescue in a Bottle

Curtis Whitson had rafted down the Arroyo Seco, a river in central California, several times before. This year, Curtis Whitson knew the water-fall was coming. He figured he would get out of his raft into the shallow water, get down the rocks along ropes on either side of the falls, and continue on his way, as he had on a previous trip.

But this year was different. Heavy snow and spring rains had turned the usually manageable falls into something fierce. And this year, instead of his friends, Whitson's companions were his girlfriend, Krystal Ramirez and his 13-year-old son, Hunter. As the three of them approached the falls late in, the afternoon of the. third day of their camping trip, Whitson could tell from the increasing roar of water in the narrowing canyon(峡谷) that they were in serious trouble. There was no way they'd be able to get down the rocks as planned: "The water was just roaring through there with tremendous force," recalls Whitson, 45.

They had no smart phone service, and they hadn't seen a single person in the past three days. And Whitson knew that they'd be sharing the ground there with rattlesnakes and mountain lions.

As he was thinking what to do, Whitson hit on a bit of luck- -he heard voices coming from the other side of the falls. He yelled, but the sound of the rushing water drowned him out.

"We have to get these people a message," Whitson thought.

He grabbed a stick and pulled out his pocketknife to carve "Help" in it. Then he tied a rope to it so the people would know it wasn't just any stick. He tried throwing it over the falls, but it floated away in the wrong direction.

"We've got to do something!" Whitson yelled to his son. "Have we got anything else?"

Then he spotted his water bottle: Whitson grabbed it and carved "Help!" on it. Ramirez also reminded him that he had a pen and paper in his backpack.

Whitson knew it was a slim hope But he wrote "6-15 19:00 We are stuck here@ the waterfall. Get help. please" and pushed the note into the bottle. This time, his throw over the waterfall was perfect.

"All right, that's all we can do," Whitson told Hunter.

It took 30 minutes to get back upstream to the beach where they 'd had lunch. Exhausted and hungry, they sat on the rock. “Honey, will our bottle for help be discovered?” Krystal looked worriedly into Whitson's eyes. “Sure.” he comforted her, trying to ease the tense atmosphere. Suddenly, a helicopter came into their sight. They shouted at the top of their lung to draw its attention ,but it hovered for a while and flew away. They waited until darkness fell in the valley. With the fierce wind howling like a hungry wolf outside their camp, they huddled together for warmth, praying for a miracle with eyes wide open.

The next morning, the helicopter returned. To their great joy, the helicopter was just right over their heads. they yelled with all their strength and waved their clothes widely in a desperate attempt to be noticed. This time, luckily, they were spotted and ultimately saved by the people in the helicopter. While looking down at the valley, all the tiredness and terror along the trip was removed by the blue sky and white clouds. What a different experience! (166字)
