Dear Anna,

It's wonderful to hear you're planning to visit China and learning Chinese! I am thrilled to offer some advice that may help you along your language learning journey.

Firstly, one of the biggest challenges of learning Chinese is the pronunciation and tones. The four basic tones in Chinese can be tricky, and even slight variations in tone can change the meaning of a word. Listening to native speakers and practicing with a tutor or language partner can help you to develop your ear for the language and improve your pronunciation. Another challenge is getting used to the grammar. Chinese sentence structure is quite different from that of English, so it may take some time to adjust. I suggest starting with basic sentence patterns and gradually working your way up to more complex structures. It may also be helpful to focus on learning practical vocabulary related to travel, such as directions, transportation, and ordering food. This will enable you to communicate more effectively during your trip.

I hope these tips are helpful to you, and I wish you the best of luck in your language learning journey. Don't forget to have fun exploring the language and culture of China!

Best regards,

Li Hua

Dear Anna,

Thank you for your email. I'm so looking forward to your visit to China and I think it's a great idea to learn some Chinese before you come.

English-speaking people often think Chinese is difficult to learn because we don't use the alphabet, but in practice it is not as difficult as it seems once you begin. What is much harder is the pronunciation, as the same sound with different tones would mean different things and correspond to different characters. I think the best advice about learning a language is to try to do a little every day — that's much more effective, in my opinion, than doing a lot once a week or once a fortnight. It'd be sensible to have some lessons, but you'd have to do a lot of work on your own in between the lessons if you want to make good progress. Although pronunciation is difficult at first, I think that's what you should concentrate on. Don't worry too much about the writing of the characters. That way you'll be able to communicate, even if you don't know how to write.

Have fun in learning Chinese and enjoy the preparation process for your visit to China.

Best regards,

Li Hua

第二节（满分 25 分）

A possible version:

Just then, something magical happened. Our observer spontaneously stood up and offered his seat to another standing man, who had been leaning on the seat corner for quite some time. All of a sudden, we had triggered a chain reaction: This game of seat-sharing spread through the bus like wildfire and, before long, almost all the standees got a chance to be seated. More surprisingly, people even started chatting with each other while exchanging positions, and soon began sharing jokes and humming to the lovely melody played by the radio. Needless to say, the rest of the journey was quite enjoyable.

The bus reached its destination in the early hours of the morning. A burst of first sunshine sent a beam of amber light through the window, lighting up people's heart. The cool breeze of early morning blew away the fatigue and weariness, refreshing the minds and bodies. Immersed in this relaxing and friendly atmosphere, the groups bid farewell warmly, got off the bus and went their way. As I stood there soaking in the early morning light, I was reminded of an important life lesson—that we can all share what we have, including our burdens, and help our co-passengers in this journey called life.
