第二部分：阅读理解（共两节，满分 35 分）

第一节（共 10 个小题；每小题 2.5 分，满分 25 分）

阅读下列短文，从每题所给的 A、B、C 和 D 四个选项中，选出最佳选项，并在答题卷上将该项涂黑。

A

The promise of college in America is the promise of a clear path to the future,of a reward for all the sleep deprivation and soul-deadening competition of high school,and,most of all,of instant adulthood.As of April,2020,however,none of that is happening due to the outbreak of the novel coronavirus(新型冠状病毒)。

Saminah Haddad,a seventeen-year-old senior at Long Beach Polytechnic High School,wasn't expecting her college offers until later in the spring.This year,there will be no spring season,which for Haddad means no four-year college.She is considering Long Beach City College,which is free for state residents.She also lost her job at an amusement park.All of the senior-year milestones that Haddad had been looking forward to have been canceled :prom,graduation,and an event called the " Pursuit of Excellence Awards,"where she would have been recognized for perfect attendance.She doesn't yet know if she'll still be working this summer for her father,who was about to open a juice bar in Brooklyn.

In the meantime,Haddad's school is offering some online instruction,but in her case the course load has dropped to just two classes:A.P.Literature,which meets virtually,and a government class,which consists of written assignments that she receives by e-mail. Haddad is planning to take her A.P. exam,though she finds it hard to imagine what the forty-five-minute,cell-phone-friendly version of the test will be like.No one knows how colleges will view it,either.

Life has been emptied of content, and the plot is lost. She texts with friends. She argues with her mom and stepdad a lot. "It's bringing us closer together," she half-joked. "But it's O.K."

21. What can be known about Haddad from Paragraph 2?

- A. She has applied to study abroad.
- B. She will attend a graduation ceremony.
- C. She won't work in her father's juice bar.
- D. She may get her college offers in late spring.

22. How does Haddad feel about the A.P. exam?

- A. Doubtful.
- B. Bored.
- C. Excited.
- D. Nervous.

23. In which section of a newspaper may the passage appear?

- A. Family.
- B. Society.
- C. Education.
- D. Health.

Noah Higgs hated learning Irish in school. He hated the way it was taught, overly formal and disconnected from ordinary people's lives. Most of all he hated the effect the lessons had on his fellow students' willingness to speak the language. But the Dublin native never lost his love for Irish, nor his opinion that more people should be learning the language.

Today, almost 40% of the 7,000 languages spoken worldwide are endangered, according to the United Nations. More are going extinct every year. It was once widely feared that the Internet revolution would accelerate this decline. If developers and smartphone manufacturers aren't willing to invest in supporting minority languages, that would cut off people who speak them from an important way to communicate and trap those languages in the past.

Higgs, 23, though, is one of a small group of educators and activists reinventing how minority languages are taught and preserved online by using cutting-edge technology.

When he was 17, Higgs had a "crazy teenage idea". He had begun using Duolingo, a mobile language-learning app, to study French, and wondered if the creators had considered adding support for Irish.

At the time in early 2013, there were five languages on Duolingo, the smallest of which, Italian, has an estimated 67.9 million speakers worldwide. By comparison, at its height in the 18th century, there were an estimated four million Irish speakers. Today the figure is closer to 1.2 million.

"I didn't get a reply," Higgs said.

But his email wasn't ignored. Inside Duolingo's open-plan, Silicon Valley-style headquarters in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, change was going on. Within five years, the language startup would build a library of over 30 languages, including some of the most endangered on the planet.

24. What was the public concern over the Internet revolution?

- A. People's less contact in real life.
- B. The negative effect on the lessons.
- C. Fewer ways of learning languages.
- D. The decline of endangered languages.

25. What was Higgs' "crazy teenage idea"?

- A. Turning to Duolingo to study French.
- B. Teaching minority languages on the Internet.
- C. Asking Duolingo developers to support Irish.
- D. Using cutting-edge technology to preserve Irish.

26. What can be learned from the last three paragraphs?

- A. Higgs' email went unnoticed.
- B. Duolingo improved its service.
- C. Duolingo's headquarters changed.
- D. Irish was on the point of dying out.

C

A desire among many seniors is to "age in place." Aging in place is a term used to describe a person living in their own house, for as long as they are able to, as they age. Yes, the familiarity of your current home is the advantage of aging in place, but the potential financial drawbacks to renovate (翻新) the house might actually be more costly than the long-term benefits.

40 years ago, with a growing family, you probably purchased a 4-bedroom child-friendly house. Now, with kids moving out, you might be thinking about changing one of your bedrooms into a massive master bathroom, and another into an open-space reading area. You might also be thinking about cutting back on lawn maintenance (草坪维护) by installing a pool surrounded by beautiful paving stones. It all sounds wonderful, doesn't it? For the short term, you may really enjoy the new upgrades, but you'll still have to climb those stairs nay to heat and cool a home that's larger than what you need, and continue fixing all the things that start to go wrong with a 40-year-old home.

Last month, in their Retirement Report, Kiplinger: addressed the point, "Renovations are just a part of what you need to make aging in place work for you. While it's typically less expensive to remain in your home than to pay for assisted living, that doesn't mean it's a slam dunk to stay put. You'll still have a long to-do list. You need to plan ahead for how you will manage maintenance and care-for your home, and for yourself."

So, at some point, the time may come when you decide to sell this house anyway. That can pose a big challenge if you've already taken cash value out of your home and used it to do the type of renovation we mentioned above. The family moving into your neighborhood is probably similar to what your family was 40 years ago.

27. Why do many seniors want to age in place?

- A. They are familiar with the house.
- B. They can enjoy long-term benefits.
- C. They can live as long as they desire.
- D. They are likely to avoid financial trouble.

28. What do the seniors renovate the houses mainly for?

- A. Preparing for aging in place.
- B. Making it more energy-efficient.
- C. Cutting back on the necessary cost.
- D. Making full use of the space available.

29. What is conveyed in the Retirement Report?

- A. Aging in place turns out to be very rewarding.
- B. Renovating the house calls for a lot of money.
- C. Assisted living deserves wider public attention.
- D. Aging in place is more than renovating the house.

30. What can be the author's advice for those wishing to age in place?

- A. Take life as it is.

- B.Think before you act.
- C.Better late than never.
- D.Enjoy life to the fullest.

第二节 (共 5 小题; 每小题 2 分, 满分 10 分)

根据短文内容, 从短文后的选项中选出能填入空白处的最佳选项。选项中有两项为多余选项。

A little battery puts out a little bit of electricity,so you can use it safely for your experiments.But the electricity that comes through the wires in your house or school is much more powerful.31

Inside the walls where you live or study,there are big wires that carry electricity.When you plug in a light or radio or other electrical appliance,you are putting the light or radio in the path way of the electricity.You have heard adults say,"Don't stick your finger into the wall plug."Now do you know why? 32 Your body is a pretty good conductor of electricity.The electrical current coming through the wires to the wall plug is so strong that it would hurt a lot if you stuck your finger in the plug.

Think:Why should you never put your fingers into the socket(插座) where the light bulb is fixed into a lamp? 33 Put your finger in there and it could be you,rather than the light bulb, that becomes part of the electrical path way.And that would hurt!

What if you held a piece of metal,like a fork or knife,and stuck it into the wall plug?Don't do it! Why? It's because metals conduct electricity.And you would get a terrible shock!

34 Can you think why?It's because water is a good conductor of electricity.When your hands are wet or when your body is in a bathtub full of water,the electricity could flow right through you and give you an awful shock,or even kill you.

Electricity is very useful,but it can be dangerous.Be careful,be safe and be smart. 35

- A.Let electricity help you,not hurt you.
- B.Keep yourself away from the electricity.
- C.Therefore,you need to remember some safety rules.
- D.Don't touch any electrical appliance when you are wet.
- E.Make your home as safe as possible for kids with these tips.

F.If you did,you would become part of the electrical path way.

G.That's the place where the electricity flows into the light bulb.

第二节：读后续写（满分 25 分）

阅读下面短文，根据所给情节进行续写，使之构成一个完整的故事。

It was a rainy November morning. Overcome with anger I knew if I didn't leave the house soon I would lose my temper with my husband, Joe. As rain came down in sheets, Joe offered to take me to work. I struggled into my jacket, seized my bag and teaching plans and ignored him.

He insisted and reached for his boots. I looked at the piles of newspapers and the dirty dishes still on the table. "Don't you have enough to do? I can take care of myself." I stormed out, not even kissing him good-bye. Joe shouted after me not to take the shortcut (捷径)。

Joe and I had been eagerly looking forward to our retirement when a heart attack that past spring forced him to leave his job earlier than we had planned. As the medical bills mounted we realized I would have to continue working full-time while Joe stayed home and took over the housework.

The new arrangement was a disaster. Exhausted after a day of full work, all I wanted was a hot homecooked meal and a good night's sleep. However, what greeted me at the table was a microwave package. Sometimes he would serve oatmeal (燕麦) for several nights in a row. One night when I dragged myself to bed, I was terrified to discover Joe had turned our white sheets blue. He told me he had found out how to save on water, soap and electricity. He patted his blue trousers and announced proudly washing everything together was just the secret.

Ten minutes later, ignoring Joe's warning I turned off the main route (道路)。I thought it hadn't rained enough to flood the road, but as I rounded the corner water rushed across my path. After a few feet, the car got stuck. I opened the door and water poured in. I hurriedly closed the door. I couldn't risk walking in this. Almost 20 minutes passed. The car began to shake. I got frightened to death when I heard three long honks (喇叭声)。
