第一节 应用文写作 (满分15分)

Dear Lucy.

I am more than delighted to know that you have learnt Chinese calligraphy. Calligraphy is the essence of Chinese culture, which is valuable, for it is like a window to better understand the Chinese culture. Thus, I advise that you shouldn't give it up.

Here are my sincere suggestions. To begin with, be patient. The more you practice, the more confident you will be. Moreover, calm down. It is no use being upset when meeting problems. Take a deep breath and go on, and everything will go smoothly in the future.

I do hope you can take my advice into consideration. Wish you success in learning.

Yours,
Li Hua

第二节 读后续写 (满分25分)

Paragraph 1:

Suddenly, we felt our kayak rocking violently. A tightly packed swarm of fish, started jumping out of the water into our kayak. Their movement sounded like crackling glass all around us. We then realized, to our wide-eyed horror, that the whales were charging toward us. I tried, with all my might, to pedal to safety, only to find we were in the middle of nowhere. Our kayak was lifted out of the water about six feet, bracketed by massive jaws. Liz and I slipped out of the kayak into the whale's mouth. My body was engulfed except for my right arm and my paddle. Fright however, deprived Liz, my poor partner, of her ability to speak, to think and to fight.

Paragraph 2:

Still, I didn't panic and I just kept thinking I've got to breathe in this "white wall". My previous knowledge about whales proved to be true. As soon as the whale dipped underwater, it spit us out, and we popped back up onto the surface about a foot apart. The entire ordeal lasted only about 10 seconds. And I felt so blessed that we were both all fours. "I thought we were dead!" Liz said. We were not, of course. But I am much more aware of the power of nature and the ocean than I was before. Liz was shaken up, likening the ordeal to a near-death experience. But even she had to laugh when she got home that afternoon and realized she'd brought back a souvenir. When she pulled off her shirt, six silverfish flopped out.
