The first man that was on the trial on the court of Grammar-land was Mr. Noun.

He is a stout big fellow, very well dressed, for he does not mind showing that he is very rich. As Mr. Noun came forward onto the court, Judge Grammar arranged his papers on the table before him, and looking at Mr. Noun through his eye-glass, asked, "What is your name?" "Name," answered Mr. Noun. "Yes, your name?" repeated the Judge. "Name," again answered Mr. Noun. "What is your name? Answer at once, and truly." "I have answered truly," replied Mr. Noun. "My name is Name, for noun means name. The name of everything belongs to me, so I am called Mr. Name, or Mr. Noun, and all my words are called nouns." "The name of everything belongs to you?" asked Judge, in surprise. "Yes," answered Mr. Noun, "the name of everything belongs to me. Desk, wine, smoke, light, a taste, a smell, all these words belong to me, and are called nouns."

"I see," said Judge Grammar, "if you have the name of everything, I hope you are satisfied, and do not ask for any more words." "Actually," replied Mr. Noun, drawing himself proudly up, "I have not mentioned nearly all my words. I own proper nouns.” “Proper nouns?” repeated Judge Grammar. “Then what are the other nouns called?” “They are only common nouns,” answered Mr. Noun, carelessly. “What are proper nouns for?” asked Judge Grammar. “let me give an example,” replied Mr. Noun. “Dog is the name given to all dogs; but Poppy is the name of one particular dog, his own proper name by which his master calls him. So dog is a common noun, Poppy is a proper noun.”

Judge Grammar then spoke, “Mr. Noun, you have claimed enough words.” He rose from his seat, and every one left the court.

Bitcoin is a fraud(欺骗) that will eventually blow up, according to JP Morgan boss Jamie Dimon, who said the digital currency was only fit for use by drug dealers, murderers and so on.

Speaking at a conference in New York, the boss of America’s biggest bank said he would fire “in a second” anyone at the investment bank found to be trading in bitcoin. “For two reasons: it’s against our rules, and they’re stupid. And both are dangerous.”

He added, “The currency isn’t going to work. You can’t have a business where people can invent a currency out of thin air and think that people who are buying it are really smart. If you were a drug dealer or a murderer, you are better off doing it in bitcoin than US dollars,” he said. “So there may be a market for that, but it would be a limited market.” It allows people to ignore banks and traditional payment processes to pay for goods and services. Banks and other financial institutions have been concerned about bitcoin’s early associations with money laundering and online crime, and it has not been adopted by any government.

“It is worse than tulip bulbs(郁金香球茎),” Dimon said, referring to a famous market bubble from the 1600s. He predicted big losses for those investing in bitcoin. He said, “Honestly, I am just shocked that anyone can’t see it for what it is.” However, the banker revealed his daughter had bought bitcoin: “It went up and she thinks she’s a genius now.”

24. What is the nature of bitcoin according to the reading?

- A. It is a currency invented for drug dealers and murderers.
B. It is a digital currency operating with no banks.
C. It is a currency with a small market now but a big future.
D. It is a currency supported by financial institutions and governments.

25. By saying “It is worse than tulip bulbs,” Dimon wanted to tell people _____

- A. Bitcoin is bound to suffer a severe breakdown.
B. People gain much less investing in bitcoin than in tulip bulbs.

C. Only those engaged in criminal activities will buy bitcoin.

D. Bitcoin carries a worse fame than tulip bulbs.

26. At the end of the passage, the writer mentions his daughter to express his _____.

A. uncertainty

B. determination

C. helplessness

D. sympathy

C

It was only a dollar. Belscher noticed it on the floor as he sat at the back of his English class at JFK High School in New York in March 2018.

When the school day ended, the wrinkled old bill was still there. Belscher picked it up and brought it to his English teacher, Mattison. "It wasn't my money," Belscher said. Mattison was a little surprised, for lots of people would have just kept it. She suggested that Belscher tape it to the whiteboard at the front of the classroom, where she always put lost things.

Hunter Rose then spotted the dollar on the whiteboard. He believed there was a mystery to it and asked Mattison why it was there. Mattison was still waiting for the original owner to claim it, so she replied, "I don't know." Rose took the tape from Mattison's desk and taped a second dollar to the board.

That got it rolling. The sight of the two dollar bills, side by side, triggered (激发) something in students. They started asking about the purpose of the money, to which Mattison always gave the same answer: She didn't know. At that point, it was absolutely right.

The effort snowballed with more students taping up single dollar bills. They believed Mattison had some unspoken goal and that they wanted to be part of whatever this was. The amount continued to grow over several weeks, until it reached $175.76. That left Mattison to decide upon the best resolution. She thought of Jack Hains, who died of ALS, a rare and harmful disease. Terry, Jack's wife, was raising money for the ALS Therapy Development Institute, which was established to seek a cure for the disease. She asked the teens whether they could donate the dollars to the institute. The answer was to tape more money to the whiteboard over the next few days to push the amount to $321.06.

27. What did Mattison plan to do with the bill when she was given it at first?

A. She wanted to praise Belscher for his honesty.

B. She actually had no idea at that time.

C. She hoped it would inspire other students.

D. She planned to help Terry raise more money.

28. What does the underlined word that in paragraph 4 refer to?

A. a dollar spotted by Hunter Rose

B. the tape from Mattison's desk

C. two bills spotted by the students

D. a dollar taped by Hunter Rose

29. Why did the students keep taping bills to the board?

A. They wanted to help Mattison achieve a special goal.

B. They considered taping bills an interesting game.

C. They wanted to show off their pocket money.

D. They tried their best to help Jack Hains.

30. What is the best title for the passage?

A. A Teacher and Her Students

B. Honesty in Everyday Life

C. More Efforts Needed in Curing ALS

D. The Multiplying One Dollar

根据短文内容，从短文后的选项中选出能填入空白的最佳选项。选项中有两项为多余选项。

Trinidad-born British author and Nobel Prize winner V. S. Naipaul died at the age of 85 in his London home. 31 He moved to England at 18 after receiving a scholarship to Oxford University. Naipaul received a knighthood from Queen Elizabeth II in 1989 and was awarded the Nobel Prize in literature in 2001.

In 1961, Naipaul published the celebrated A House for Mr. Biswas. The novel was about how one man's life was restricted by the limits of colonial society. 32 "If he had been born in another culture, not a colonial agricultural society, his talent would have given him a reasonable chance somewhere and he would have flourished," Naipaul said.

After writing A Bend in the River, he said that Africa has no future. He was defined by the famous opening words of it: The world is what it is; men who are nothing, who allow themselves to become nothing, have no place in it. 33 Naipaul's response is: People must earn respect on their own. Everyone has the freedom to work hard and the responsibility to work hard. 34 One should not think that he or she can enjoy respect by the natural existence.

In the second half of the 20th century, few writers were as praised or looked down upon as Naipaul. 35. "If a writer doesn't generate hate," Naipaul once said, "he is dead." In a world that desires to present life in black and white, the complications of Naipaul are a reminder that it is more wisely seen in shades of gray.

- A. It was in praise of Naipaul's father.
- B. The life of inaction was worthless.
- C. Naipaul was born into an Indian family.
- D. His views are debatable, but his writing must be celebrated.
- E. His talent for essay was as great as his tendency for controversy.
- F. The hidden aggression in this sentence hurts the feelings of many readers.
- G. His comments about women and Africa were often unjustified, unpleasant and untrue.

The spot of red was what first caught Randy Heiss’s attention on December 16, 2018. He was hiking the remote land behind his farm in a small town near the U.S.-Mexico border, and there lying on the grass was a balloon. He walked toward it with his dog, thinking he should pick it up and throw it away.

That’s when he noticed the balloon’s string was attached to a piece of paper. “Dayami,” it read on one side, in a child’s writing. A hand-drawn bow accompanied the word. Heiss flipped the paper over. On the back he saw a numbered list, all in Spanish. His Spanish wasn’t very good, but he could see it was a Christmas list!

Heiss was charmed. He suspected that a child had tried to send Santa Claus a Christmas wish list by balloon, something he used to do himself when he was a kid. Nobody had ever returned the letters Heiss had sent, but he wondered whether he could find the girl who had sent this one.

It would be difficult, but Heiss had a few clues. About 20 miles to the southwest, just across the border, was the city of Nogales, Mexico, with a population of about a quarter million. Based on the wind direction, he was almost sure that was where it came from. Heiss brought the note home to his wife, who is fluent in Spanish and helped him translate the list. They determined that Dayami, probably a girl, had asked for a doll, a dollhouse, doll clothes and art supplies.

Heiss then posted his search about finding Dayami on Facebook, attaching photos, hoping some of his friends in Nogales might know the girl’s family. A few days passed with no results; Heiss worried that time was running out before Christmas. On December 19, 2018, he decided to send a private Facebook message to Radio Xeny, an AM radio station based in Nogales. To his surprise, someone from the station called him back right away and promised him to post his search on the station’s Facebook page immediately.
