A Memorable Labor Experience

Last Saturday was May Day, when my class participated in the labor practice held in our school vegetable base.

At dawn, we cycled to the base. On arrival, we were shown around by our teacher and then assigned different tasks. Under the teacher's patient instructions, we turned over the soil, weeded, planted vegetables like tomatoes and eggplants and watered them. Looking at lines of young green vegetables, the teacher cheerfully said we'd enjoy our self-grown vegetables soon, which filled us with a sense of achievement.

The meaningful activity offered us a chance to learn about farming. Besides, though tired, I did feel the pleasure and value of labor.

第二节（满分 25 分）（One possible version）

But these books were far from enough. To ensure children get access to more books, Sadiya took pictures of the library and uploaded them online, calling on students to donate books to the children library. Before long, hundreds of new and secondhand books poured in, but they needed checking, classifying and arranging in order on the shelves, which took Sadiya, her uncle and cousin a whole week. Tired as Sadiya was, a smile lit up her face when she pictured the scene where children were buried in reading by the book-filled shelves.

With everything ready, the library finally opened. Several children stepped in curiously, asking Sadiya, "Can we read the books?" "Sure. Welcome!" Sadiya encouraged them. Some chose what they liked, while others hesitated. Realizing they had trouble reading, Sadiya gathered them in a corner, teaching them from the very beginning. Soon more children joined in. Every night Sadiya spared some time to give lessons so that more children could gain knowledge from the books. Sadiya's efforts opened the wisdom door for them, which would surely make a great difference to their lives.
