(Text 1)

W: Get your shoes on, Henry. Shut down that video game. We're going to the mall.

M: The mall? Do I have to go?

W: Yes. Your pants are too short and your shirts are too tight.

(Text 2)

W: I can make a reservation for dinner tonight. Should I make it for five or six o'clock?

M: Well, six is the earliest I can get off work, so it should certainly be later than that.

(Text 3)

M: How was your camping trip this past weekend?

W: Well, it rained all weekend, so that kind of ruined the fun. We brought delicious food, but it was too wet to make it over the campfire. And we forgot to bring raincoats!

(Text 4)

W: Blake, you're going to New York City, right? For how long?

M: Just for the summer. My uncle lives there. I'm going to help him at his clothing shop for the month of June, and then I'll spend the rest of the time getting to know the city.

(Text 5)

M: What's wrong?

W: You're supposed to sweep the floor today. You've lived here for three months, and you've never swept even once! I don't know if your mom did all your chores when you lived at home, but you're in college now, and we're not going to clean up for you!

(Text 6)

W: Are you still looking for a new job?

M: No. Last week, I was hired by the Mercedes-Benz store.

W: Really? What will you be doing there?

M: Well, for now, my job is to wash cars and fill them with gas. But I hope that within the next year, I'll be selling cars.

W: Wow. You'd be really good at that. In high school, when you used to sell T-shirts, you convinced a lot of people to buy them.

M: Yeah. But that was a long time ago!

W: True.

M: Yeah. But I actually believe I can be a good car salesman at the Mercedes-Benz store.

(Text 7)

W: Can I help you? It looks like you're working hard.

M: I'm planning the class graduation party. Want to help?

W: Sure. Do you need help with food, entertainment, or setting up the room?

M: You can help me with the food, I think.

W: OK. Is the party going to be formal?

M: Let's make it informal. After all, we're inviting our parents. They might like a break from dressing up for work.

W: OK. What kind of food should I buy? Chinese? Western? Indian? Thai?

M: We should probably have both of the first two.

W: Those will be easy to get.

M: I'm trying to decide if we should have games or a singing contest.

W: Maybe we could do both!

(Text 8)

W: Please come in! John, how did your meeting go with that customer from New York? I want to hear all the details.

M: Well, I'm afraid my story may be a little disappointing, though. From the moment she opened the door, things went downhill. First, I forgot her name, so I didn't know how to greet her.

W: That's bad. How could you do that?

M: I don't know. After we talked a bit about the project, we went to an Italian restaurant, and I spilled wine all over her dress.

W: Oh, my God. That doesn't sound good. What about the rest of the night? Weren't you going to that new comedy together?

M: It was terrible. She didn't find it funny, and neither did I, so we left early and had coffee at Starbucks.

W: Did that go any better?

M: Well, it turns out she is allergic to coffee.

W: I see. I hope you'll do better next time.

M: Of course. I'll be better prepared next time.

(Text 9)

M: Are you ready to go look at apartments today?

W: Yes! I'm excited to get my own place for the first time.

M: Well, I have plenty of choices to show you. We'll find you a home before the day is over!

W: Sounds great. What's first on the list?

M: First, I have a nice one-bedroom place for you to see. The building has a parking spot and a locked gate, and the apartment has brand new furniture. Then around midday, we'll head downtown to look at a bright and cozy studio apartment that I think might be a perfect fit for you.

W: I can't wait! As long as they are in my price range, those sound like good choices.

M: So, you don't mind living downtown, right?

W: No, I'm flexible about the location because I have a car, as I told you on the phone. However, I really can't pay over $1000 a month in rent. I'd love to get down to $800, actually.

M: I think we can make that work. I have a few more apartments downtown that I can show you in the afternoon. We'll find something in that range.

(Text 10)

Thanks for tuning in to today's weather forecast on WBEZ Tulsa. We have a boiling hot day expected here in Tulsa, Oklahoma. Temperatures have been in the high nineties all week and will break one hundred degrees this afternoon. Fortunately, it's pretty dry out there. This will at least make the high temperatures not seem any hotter. We are seeing a storm in the forecast for later in the week which will hopefully cool things down. Please be sure to drink a lot of water and use a lot of sun cream if you will be outside for long periods of time. Try to stay indoors and wear a hat if you go outside or to the pool. Don't leave your pets or young children in the cars with the windows up. The Big Splash water park here in town is offering a "hot days" discount for kids this week. That should help us cool off a little bit! Be careful out there, folks. Tune in tomorrow for another Tulsa weather update here on WBEZ!

Green School, We Are in Action

Aiming to raise our awareness of protecting school environment, a tree-planting activity with the theme of “Green School, We Are in Action” was organized by the Students’ Union on Saturday afternoon last week.

At 2:00 p. m. , the students and teachers from different grades actively participated in it, some digging, some planting and others watering. During the activity, 1000 new trees were planted along the main road in our school as planned. Looking at the lines of young trees, tired as they were, they smiled delightedly.

This activity provided us a good platform for communication between teachers and students. It also enabled us to contribute to building a beautiful and green school together and planting hope.

Then she put his hands on the back of the chair. “Hang on this and you won’t fall.” she said. His feet trembling, Craig tried to move cautiously with his hands grabbing the chair firmly. Riley and Liz cheered him on as he started to move forward. But Craig slowly lowered his head, frowning, as he inched along and he even couldn’t skate without the chair. This wasn’t like flying at all. Realizing his frustration, Riley patted his shoulder and comforted, “It takes practice. Someday you will.” Then she winked at Liz and whispered something to her.

After a while, each girl took one of Craig’s hands. “Someday you’ll fly on your own,” Riley said. “But today Liz and I will help you.” They started skating, pulling Craig with them. The girls went faster and faster on the lake, and so did he. Craig felt the wind touching his face merrily with brilliant sparkle in his eyes. When he looked down, his skate blades looked like a silver light. “I’m flying!” he yelled, and the words blew away in the wind like a bird’s happy song.
