

高考阅读理解推理判断题——推断情感态度

A

I never knew anyone who'd grown up in Jackson without being afraid of Mrs. Calloway, our librarian. She ran Jackson's Carnegie Library absolutely by herself. SILENCE in big black letters was on signs hung everywhere. If she thought you were dressed improperly, she sent you straight back home to change your clothes. I was willing; I would do anything to read.

...

Mrs. Calloway made her own rules about books. You could not take back a book to the library on the same day you'd taken it out; it made no difference to her that you'd read every word in it and needed another to start. You could take out two books at a time and two only...

Dana Dakin spent many years building a successful career in finance. Then she heard about the concept of living life in thirds. The first third was to be spent learning, the second spent making money, and the third spent giving back. In 2003, when Dakin reached 60, she decided it was time to start giving back. Her plan was to travel to Ghana, Africa, and find a village to "adopt." She would provide microfinance loans (small amounts of money) to women to help revitalize the economic life of the village and its inhabitants.

Dakin ended up in Pokusae, where she met, and began building relationships with, the local women. She developed a program to provide microfinance loans to help the woman start their own businesses, usually selling things such as food, clothing, or household items. The businesses have helped the community, as well as individuals who run them. Dakin brought together volunteers, both retired executives (执行官) and college students who traveled with her to Pokuase to help the villagers learn how to run a small business. Together everyone involved became successful.

Today, Dakin's organization, WomensTrust, provides loans and scholarships to over 1,000 women in several villages in Ghana. It also brings medical supplies and care to health clinics in the area. One afternoon last week, I saw three tearful children from my son's school being comforted by teachers. That morning, my 11-year-old had stomach pains, retching (干呕) into a bowl. Talking to other mothers later, I heard about other children with stomachache or difficulty sleeping the night before.

What caused so much pain? Sports day. Sports day might be necessary at a highly-competitive independent school, but not at a village primary school. For the children who can fly like the wind, sports day causes no problem. For those who are overweight or just not good at sport, it is a nightmare. Even for those who enjoy running but fall halfway down the track in front of the entire school and their parents, it can prove a disaster.

I wish that sports day could be abandoned and replaced with some other less competitive event. Perhaps an afternoon of team games, with a few races for those who want them, would be less stressful for the children and a lot more fun to watch.

3. What is the author's attitude towards sports day?

- A. Critical.                      B. Neutral.                      C. Positive.                      D. Ambiguous.
