Possible Version

Para 1: Familiar smells of fresh earth rose up to greet her the moment Ally stepped into the woods. Some things never change, Ally thought. Quickening her pace, she hurried to the rock by the stream where she and her father used to sit and eat lunch. She sat on it, with her face toward the sun. Overhead the sky was filled with birds, whose sweet songs echoed throughout the woods. Ally felt content for the first time in a long while. She could almost hear her father's laughter in the gentle breeze. "I know Dad will send the warbler to me. And I won't stop searching until I spot it," she promised herself, settling comfortably on the rock and waiting patiently. But without luck, the pretty bird didn't appear.

Para 2: All too soon the sun disappeared behind thick gray clouds and Ally was about to go back home when suddenly she heard a ringing birdsong and saw a flash of fiery orange swooped (俯冲) down and perched (栖息) on a nearby branch. An excited feeling bubbled up inside of Ally. For a moment she couldn't believe her eyes, but it was true. The tiny wood warbler just sat there, looking around, as if it were waiting for something. "I knew it!" she exclaimed, leaping to her feet. Ally blinked back tears. "Thanks, Dad. I'll always miss our times together, but I feel better now," she whispered, slowly lifting her camera and taking pictures.
