True heroes are all around us. Some help others, and others are simply good role models. My hero is my brother—Thomas.

When Thomas and I were little, we used to go to the playground a lot. Kids would be scared of him and ask, “Is your arm broken?”

Thomas would respond by explaining what happened: he was born without the left arm. If they ran away, he wouldn’t let it bother him.

Thomas is expert at both cross-country(越野跑) and track. He is a 4:46 miler, which with the setback he has makes it an even greater accomplishment. Missing an arm affects his balance, which affects his leg drive. The work he has put in, however, has made up for this. He practices so hard that anything short of success would seem a disappointment.

Thomas used to play baseball like it was a religion. His idol was Jim Abbott, a pitcher(投手) for the California Angels. Abbott was a very good pitcher who only had one arm. “I looked up to Abbott because I saw what I could achieve,” Thomas said. Thomas had a lot of trouble giving up baseball for track because he felt like he was taking the easy way out, though he liked track more.

One of Thomas’ best friends, Brad, didn’t even notice Thomas only had one arm for a few weeks after meeting him. “He carried himself so confidently, so I felt okay admitting that I hadn’t noticed,” said Brad. Not only is Thomas a confident person who is not ashamed of his arm, he is often the center of attention in sports and school.

Thomas seems to have accepted his disability. I see it as more of a difficulty, and difficulties can be overcome. Sometimes, if you try hard enough, you can overcome impossible things. As the great distance runner Steve Prefontaine said, “To give anything less than your best is to sacrifice the gift.”

- ()21. Which of the following words best describe Thomas?
A. Courageous and modest. B. Determined and religious.
C. Confident and strong-willed. D. Energetic and changeable.
- ()22. Why did Thomas give up baseball for track?
A. Because he had a preference for track.
B. Because his idol encouraged him to change.
C. Because he thought track was easier for him.
D. Because he couldn’t play baseball with single arm.
- ()23. The underlined sentence in the last paragraph is intended to remind us _____.
A. giving is receiving B. nothing is impossible
C. hard work leaves no regrets D. difficulties are gifts from God

B

We’ve all been there, running for a bus or train on a cold morning only to find that our nose is also running! Grab some tissues and learn the science behind the phenomenon known as “skier’s nose”.

A nose like a running tap in winter is business as usual for many people. People call it “skier’s nose”. In a study, researchers found that 96 percent of people surveyed reported experiencing some degree of the condition.

Apparently, getting a runny nose in cold weather is a bodily defense reaction. That’s because the nose has two main purposes: 1) to filter bacteria so they don’t reach our lungs, and 2) to warm and humidify(加湿) the air before it reaches our lungs. Our airways are lined with tiny hairs known as cilia. In the nose, these cilia wave back and forth to remove our mucus(黏液) so that bacteria can be blocked out. In cold weather the cilia are slowed. When cilia slow, bacteria remain in place and multiply, and this is why people get sick in winter. Not that the nose isn’t trying to keep you healthy. All that running nose experience is the nose working overtime to produce more liquid to help move bacteria along. To help it out, experts say that you can try physically warming your nose: Rub your hands together, and then breathe into cupped hands or draw in steam from hot green tea and drink it, as green tea helps accelerate the growth and functioning of cilia.

Our nose runs in winter for one more purpose, which is to fight against the drier outside (and inside) air. In winter, or when it’s cold outside, the air is much drier than in summer. Our noses respond by producing more liquid to help humidify the air to a level our bodies need, and that’s when it starts to run out of the end of our nose.

- () 24. What does the underlined word “filter” probably mean in the third paragraph?
A. Kill. B. Prevent. C. Defend. D. Trap.
- () 25. What can we know about “cilia”?
A. They only exist in the nose. B. They stop working in winter.
C. They can sweep away mucus. D. They help break down bacteria.
- () 26. Which of the following is the best title for the text?
A. When Do You Have A Running Nose?
B. What Are the Purposes of Your Nose?
C. How Can You Deal With “Skier’s Nose”?
D. Why Does Your Nose Run When It’s Cold?

C

If you grew up in a household that had its fair share of book shelves, it might say something positive about your personality now that you’re all grown up.

This new study found that people who grew up in book-filled homes have higher reading, math, and technological skills. The researchers analyzed data featuring 160,000 adults(ages 25 to 65) across 31 nations. All participants were asked how many books there were in their home when they were 16 years old. They chose from a series of alternatives ranging from “10 or less” to “more than 500”.

If a household held at least 80 books, then participants went on to display the average rate of literacy and numeracy(认字和计算). The rate of literacy continued to increase in parallel to the number of books a household contained until the rate didn’t increase from 350 books onwards. Furthermore, young teenagers who grew up around books were shown to have the same levels of literacy and numeracy as university graduates who had only grown up around a few books.

Literacy was clarified as “the ability to read effectively to participate in society and achieve personal goals”. Participants took tests that “captured a range of basic through advanced comprehension skills, from reading brief texts for a single piece of information to synthesizing(合成) information from complex texts”. Numeracy tests measured the “ability to use mathematical concepts in everyday life”, while IT-related tests “assessed the ability to use digital technology to communicate with others, as well as to gather, analyze, and synthesize information”.

The results suggest those books made a long-term difference. “Growing up with home libraries improves adult skills in these areas beyond the benefits from parental education, or one’s own educational or occupational attainment,” the researchers report. Not surprisingly, the biggest effect was on reading ability. “The total effects of home library size on literacy are large everywhere,” the researchers report.

第二节:读后续写(满分 25 分)

阅读下面短文,根据所给情节进行续写,使之构成一个完整的故事。

It was a Sunday morning. Betty woke up earlier than usual. She couldn't sleep any longer because she was so excited that her uncle Mark was taking her to the beach. She had always loved going surfing with her uncle. She put her swimming suit on and took her bag quickly that she had prepared the night before and went outside to wait. She jumped up and down with joy when she saw her uncle's red jeep turn the corner down her street.

Uncle Mark got out of the car and helped Betty get in. "Are you ready?" he asked. "Yes!" replied Betty. Uncle Mark could see the excitement in her face. Suddenly he said seriously, "Well, before we go, I have to let you know that a shark appeared recently where we're going to surf today." Scared and shocked, Betty couldn't say a word. "Haha! I'm kidding you," Uncle Mark burst out laughing. Betty laughed too. She knew Uncle Mark liked teasing others. "Let's go and have some breakfast. I know just the place," Uncle Mark said. They went to a breakfast shop and ate some tacos(炸玉米饼).

After breakfast the two of them went down to Pacific Beach and got their surfboards ready. "First you have to wax(打蜡) the bottom," explained Uncle Mark. "I know. I've watched you do it before!" Betty said as she took the wax from Uncle Mark's hand. It took about 15 minutes to wax the bottom of their boards. When Betty finished, Uncle Mark looked it over to make sure it was done well. "Nice job, Betty, you wax your board like a true suffer."

Finally, they were ready to get into the water. They carried their boards down to the beach and went out into the water. Betty was overly excited and tried to rush to catch a wave. Predictably, she crashed and had to start over. Next was her uncle's turn. He stood up on his first try and smoothly surfed the wave before jumping into the water. Betty cheered for her uncle's perfect run.
