读后续写（满分25分）

阅读下面短文，根据所给情节进行续写，使之构成一个完整的故事。

About a half-mile behind our Minnesota farm lay a pond. In summer, my brother Harry and I would run through a stand of oak trees to skip stones there. The pond wore a collar of black mud. It was not a place for swimming.

In late summer, the pond would be covered by a green and bubbly scum(起泡的浮渣). Sometimes a strong, unpleasant smell rose from it. We stayed away.

When winter came, the pond was once again an inviting place. One day when ice covered it, Harry said to me, “Try walking across.”

The ice looked solid. No water showed through it, but I hesitated. “Go ahead.” Harry urged. “Try it. You’re lighter than I am. If the ice holds, we can run and slide carefully on it. It’ll be fun.” I wanted to please Harry, and I thought about the fun of a long slide on the ice. I began to slide across the pond.

Step 2 Analyse the article 文本解读

In the middle of the pond, the ice gave way with a sudden crack(裂缝)! I stretched out(伸展) my arms. The next thing I knew I was hanging on to the edge of a hole in the ice by arms outstretched on the ice. From my shoulders down I hung in icy water. I thought of the bottom of the pond. I knew it would be black and awful down there, full of mud and maybe rotting creatures.

I tried to climb out of the hole, but when I got a knee on the ice, it broke like window glass. Again and again I tried to get out. Again and again the ice broke into pieces. The hole widened. I was wearing a coat of heavy material. As it became completely wet, it dragged me down. I was tired of the struggle and rested with my arms stretched out on the ice.

I looked at Harry on shore. He seemed rooted to the spot. “I can’t get out!” I screamed when I caught some breath.

How to survive the ice?

It can be truly terrifying to fall through ice on a frozen lake. 1. In fact, there is more time to help you survive than you think.

As you first hit the freezing water, you will almost breathe quickly at once. Remember to get control of your breathing and not to move around. This means that it takes about one minute to gain control of your breathing, ten minutes to move before you get too cold. The final one is to remind you that it will take one hour before you become unconscious.

Take that first minute and fully focus on your breathing. Slow it down, and then look around to see if you can locate the thickest area of ice. When you locate the ice, stretch your arms over the surface, and then begin to flutter-kick(上下打水)until your body becomes horizontal with the surface.

It is possible that you can live for several hours after passing out. This, however, does require some planning. You only have about 10 minutes before your muscles and nerves become too cold to work. Besides, what if you feel too weak to go on and you cannot get out? The point is to encourage your coat to freeze to the ice, so that if you lose consciousness, you will keep your head out of ice.

How to Survive a Fall Through Ice

语法填空

In northern (north) climates with lots of lakes and rivers, ice is a common sight during the colder months. The formation of ice provides the opportunity to enjoy a variety (vary) of winter activities, such as ice fishing, playing hockey and cross-country skiing. However, unless the ice is thick and can withstand your weight (weigh), there is a danger of falling through the ice into extremely (extreme) cold water. Once in the water, panic, hypothermia and drowning are all difficult challenges to overcome (overcome). Surviving (Survive) a fall through the ice is certainly possible, but it takes (take) courage and knowledge of some life-saving tips.

Keep as calm as possible.

Brace yourself.

Roll your body
across the ice once you're out.

2

Focus your energy on getting out immediately.

3

Get horizontal and kick your legs.

Step 3 Episodic reasoning 情节推理

根据所学的相关知识，结合“逆推法”，对情节做出如下推理：

Paragraph 2:

The moment I crashed through the kitchen door, sobbing, mum rushed over.

“I” was rescued.

Paragraph 1:

Harry turned and ran from the pond.

How was “I” rescued?

可能性1： Harry ran away and asked sb./ sth. for help.

可能性2： Harry ran away and left me alone.

第一段情节的心里活动

Paragraph 1:

Harry turned and ran from the pond.

心急如焚

Harry felt like a cat on hot bricks. He thought, "He is my younger brother, I must turn to someone or something for help. I must save him."

根据“正能量原则”这种可能性不大存在。”

非常开心

Seeing the scene, I was at the top of the world. I reckoned, "Harry must look for someone or something to help me a hand."

感到绝望

Seeing the scene, I am feeling blue. In my opinion, he must leave me alone, escaping like an arrow off a string.

a possible version

Para. 1

He turned and ran from the pond. At that moment, there was only one belief in his mind that he must save his own brother. He knew if his brother stayed in the water too long, he would die. Harry felt like a cat on hot bricks. He must think of a solution to make his brother climb out of the icy water. To search for objects that could help his brother, he ran to the oak trees like an arrow that left spring. For me, staring at his familiar figure out of sight, my mind went blank. My heart ached, tears streaming down my cheeks. I worked my fingers to the bones to crawl out by myself, but nothing came of it. I was thrown into a black world, crying desperately. It was at this moment that I saw Harry ran towards to me with a large, black, V-shaped oak branch. My worry gave way to relief in no time. He lay on his stomach, pushing the branch before him and wound his way towards me. I grabbed the branch with care and was ultimately dragged out of the icy water by Harry. What a narrow escape! We staggered shiveringly home, with my wet clothes dripping and my shoes squishing and squirting water.

“欧亨利式结尾”小尝试

Para. 1

He turned and ran from the pond. Watching him walk out on me, I was seized by a strong sense of horror, feeling I was thrown into a dark world and sank into hopelessness. The icy water made me shiver with coldness and fear, and I cannot resist crying with my eyes closed, reckoning that I would die . However, survival instinct made me compose myself. Failed as I had many times, my mind began to race, trying to think of a good solution. With my arms still stretching out on the ice, I discreetly fumbled for something that is hard with my foot under the ice. All of a sudden, a hard thing touched my foot, maybe a stone, many tortoise shells (the tortoises died in summer) or something else. A feeling of hope slowly crept up on me. Supported by the hard objects, I moved inch by inch. As if a century had passed, Ultimately, I crawled out of the ice hole. Staying flat on the ice, I rolled on it and survived. My face beamed and my bright smile lit up the whole sky. At this time, Harry came back with a oak limb in his hand. Looking at me rolling on the ice safe and sound, he stood there, rooted to the spot with his mouth open wide.

a possible version

Para. 2:

I crashed through the kitchen door, sobbing, mum rushed over. Looking at me shivering with coldness, She asked me in surprise, “what had happened?” Before I answered, she quickly took off my wet coat and gave me a hot bath. After then, she asked me to rest on the bed. I sobbed out my grievances to her. Fuming with rage, she told Harry off. His head drooping, Harry was fear-ridden, saying nothing. So ashamed was he that he could feel the blood rush to his face. Scolded as he was, he didn’t change himself thoroughly, I changed myself root and branch. After that, the pond put a brand in my heart that I could never erase. It was “the pond” that made me understand at times we should say “No” to others in the first place. I didn't try to please others any more to put my ass on the line. For the rest of my life, I myself am the most expensive.

He turned and ran from the pond. As I looked at his back, I wondered: Is he running for help, or is he running away and leaving me to slip²¹ to the bottom?

I was surprised to see him bend²² and pick up a large, fallen oak limb²³. It was black and V-shaped. He ran with it toward the pond. At the edge, he flopped²⁴ to his stomach, pushed the limb before him, and wriggled²⁵ toward me. When a slender²⁶ top branch was within reach, I grabbed for it. It did not break.

Hand over hand²⁷, I pulled myself from the hole. I began to stand. I wanted to run from the pond as fast as I could run. Harry yelled, "Get down! Stay flat on the ice or it'll break again." I obeyed. Harry wriggled backward toward shore, towing²⁸ the limb. I hung on to a branch and wriggled toward shore on my stomach.

Off the pond, we ran toward the house. My overshoes²⁹ squished³⁰ and squirted³¹ water. My clothes dripped³².

Near the house Harry said, "I'm making myself scarce³³."

I crashed through the kitchen door, sobbing³⁴, "I fell through the ice." Mother rushed over, un-buttoned my coat, and stripped³⁵ my clothes from me. She filled a tub³⁶ with hot water. The bath stopped my teeth-chattering chill³⁷, and I was able to tell her all that had happened.

After the bath, I was given a cup of hot milk to drink and was sent to bed. "I don't want you to get pneumonia³⁸," said Mother.

I heard Mother call Harry. I heard him come into the kitchen. I heard loud voices.

He was being lectured³⁹ about getting a younger sibling⁴⁰ into trouble. He was sent to bed as punishment.

I do not think it changed him, because when summer came he wanted me to parachute⁴¹ from the loft⁴² of the big red barn to a small scattering⁴³ of hay on the ground. He handed me a gunnysack⁴⁴ to use as a parachute.

"You go first," he said. "Try it, Sis. It'll be fun."

But I had changed. I said no, and so got through the rest of my childhood safe of life and limb⁴⁵.

If you don't want to do something for somebody, you should manage to say "No." in the first place.

The moment you give in, you've given them the impression that they can use your time as long as they try hard enough.

No "Let me see."

No "Maybe."

Just "No." and a "Sorry." if you want to be polite.

Or you can ask "How much?" if it suits you.

Time is the most precious thing that we have.

Once you lose a piece of it, you can never get it back.

And you have the freedom to decide how to use each piece of it.

So if someone want a piece of your time, they have to be worth it, either by being someone you truly care about or by providing enough payment.

Let me say it once again.
