Below is a screenshot of book review on a bestseller My Life on Craigslist.

Krysi Joseph

4.0 out of 5 stars

Odd, fun and cute story. Great read

This was a cute, lighthearted book that explores the life of a Craigslist addict, and how Craigslist, a large free classifieds (分类广告) website, got her through her life so far. The story was well thought out and pretty realistic when it comes to life struggles. It gets a little unbelievable towards the end, and I don't like it when authors conform to the 'the world is perfect' viewpoint most books have, but, that's just my pessimist breaking through.

The book needs some serious editing. She's repeated the same exact line 3-4 times a couple of times, and...(click for more)

Would Have Given it 4 stars, but...

The book went along well. Funny and totally in the here and now. I would have given it more if SPOILER ALERT (剧透警告): It didn't end with her in a love relationship with the guy she had been spying on that fit her. Seriously, it went...(click for more)

Lovetoread

4.0 out of 5 stars

Beach or vacation read—it's worth it!

I was intrigued by the description, so I gave it a shot. I'm glad I did. I was never like the main character, Emily, so it's interesting to read about her aimless life. She lives on Craigslist—finding roommates, finding work, finding social...(click for more)

Annabella11

5.0 out of 5 stars

Lifting my spirits type unforgettable and funny book

I read and instantly loved this book, because it is witty and entertaining but at the same time has philosophical and psychological background with an honest look at the real life in a big city. It perfectly shows how a single young woman, while living there and surviving,...(click for more)

Gladys West, the mathematician, was born in 1930 in Virginia and had to help harvest crops on her family's farm. The hard work started before daybreak and lasted well into the blistering heat of the afternoon. To get out of there, she was going to get an education.

Her parents tried to save some money to send her to college, but unexpected bills kept hitting the fund. Then a teacher announced that the state was going to give a college scholarship to the two top students from her year. Finally, West got the scholarship, allowing her to attend Virginia State College, a historically black university.

West decided to major in mathematics because it was a well-respected subject. It was largely studied by men, but she didn't take much notice of them as she knew deep in her heart that nothing was getting in her way. After graduating, she became a teacher. A few years later, she returned to the university and earned a master's degree in mathematics. Then she was offered a job at a naval base in Dahlgren, Virginia. This made her only the second black woman to be hired to work as a programmer at the base.

Despite her intellectual abilities and career success, West felt she was inferior. It was this feeling, deeply rooted and felt, by many African Americans, that drove her to work as hard as she could. West determined to commit herself to her work, hoping that by doing it to the best of her ability, she could get recognition for her work.

24. What was the decisive factor to enable Gladys West to go to the university?

25. What can we infer from the text?

26. What does the underlined phrase “a building block” in paragraph 5 mean?

27. What kind of person is Gladys West?

- C

The development of AI-generated art also raises alarm bells about how these fake images could be used to spread misinformation. “I think misinformation is going to hit an all-time high,” Jamie Cohen, a digital culture and AI expert in the US, told New York Post. Generating an AI artwork is to “create reality”, Cohen argued, adding that, being able to tell whether the work is real or not requires high media literacy (素养) skills. “The world may not be ready for how realistic the images have become,” Shane Kittelson, a US researcher, told The Washington Post.

28. Why are Donald Trump’s photos mentioned in the first paragraph?

- A. To draw more people’s attention.
- B. To make people convinced of the news.
- C. To show the AI-generated images were fake.
- D. To prove that it’s easy for AI to cheat people.

29. Why does AI generate human hands incorrectly according to the text?

- A. It is unable to recognize human hands.
- B. The data it uses to learn contain errors.
- C. It doesn’t fully understand human hands.
- D. It has insufficient data about human hands.

30. Which of the following will Jamie Cohen agree with?

- A. AI artworks may not be reflective of true creativity.
- B. It’s high time to address the risks posed by AI works.
- C. AI artworks will replace traditional art forms in the future.
- D. Detecting real art demands strong media literacy competence.

31. Where is the text probably from?

- A. A news report.
- B. A diary.
- C. A research paper.
- D. A science fiction.

The success of many North American crops partly depends on ground beetles, small insects that eat pests and weed seeds that could otherwise damage crops. But a new study by researchers in the U.S. and Canada suggests not all of the nearly 2,000 species of ground beetles found in North America will survive climate change. Some could decline. And that could have a far-reaching impact on agriculture, forestry, and conservation.

By analyzing data on 136 different ground beetle species across continental North America, Puerto Rico and Hawaii, the researchers found that a species’ chance of success in a changing climate depends on several important factors, such as its habitat preference, body size, and whether it flies, climbs or runs.

“We found that less mobile, nonflying ground beetles, which are critical pest control agents, are more likely to decline over time in a warmer, dryer climate,” said Tong Qiu, who led the study. “That means you’re going to have more pests that can impact agricultural and forest ecosystems.” But there is reason for hope, Qiu added, because the analysis also showed that habitat conservation can lessen these effects and reverse the trends in some areas.

“We hope conservation biologists will use this information and the online map that we created to better manage habitats for insects in general. Ground beetles are very beneficial to ecosystems, but they’re largely invisible to the average person. In this paper we’re showing the broad impacts they have on whole communities in forested and agricultural ecosystems,” said Qiu.

The researchers used ground beetle count data from the National Science Foundation’s National Ecological Observatory Network (NEON) and from 11 previously published studies to measure and map the beetles’ distribution across North America. Habitat information, such as the location of gaps in forest canopies and the density of plants on a forest floor, was obtained by using NEON’s imaging instruments to create detailed three-dimensional images of landscapes. They then entered the data collected into a computer model to simulate (模拟) climate changes to study how the insects would respond.

32. What does the new study in North America show?

- A. Pests could destroy crops.
- B. Some ground beetles will not survive a climate change.
- C. The survival of ground beetles only depends on its habitat.
- D. Some ground beetles will destroy crops in a warmer climate.

33. What does Tong Qiu intend to convey in paragraphs 3 and 4?

- A. There is no way to stop the decline of ground beetles.
- B. Critical pests are more adaptable in a warmer, drier climate.
- C. Ground beetles will become less mobile in a warmer climate.
- D. The importance of ground beetles should be widely recognized.

34. How did the research team carry out the study?

- A. By analyzing data.
- B. By studying documents.
- C. By doing field research.
- D. By performing experiments.

35. What can be the best title for the text?

- A. North American Agriculture Crops at Risk
- B. A Catastrophic Climate Change on the Way
- C. Crop-saving Beetles under Climate Threat
- D. New Breakthrough in Biodiversity Research

Five years ago, I was a trail ride leader at a holiday farm in Victoria. My favourite horse was a warmblood called Holly, a chestnut mare. Aged seven, she was 41, sweet-natured and well-trained; the only 42 with Holly was her vivid imagination. I was constantly surprised by Holly's ability to be 43 by rabbits, the wind or even shadows—sometimes her own shadow!

One day, as we headed back from a ride on the beach, Holly and I were 44 the way over the hilly area. When we got to one particularly long, steep hill, Holly began to twitch (抽动) her ears and step in place. So, when she 45 to sniff (嗅) and give all the 46 that she believed the 'horse-eating monsters' were close, I became a little worried.

At the bottom of the hill as we rounded a corner, Holly 47 with caution, and so I followed her gaze to the path ahead. There, sunning itself in the middle of the track, was a brown 48. This time it was my 49 to get scared; I was on a nervous horse, leading a group of eight inexperienced pre-teen riders. Unexpectedly, Holly was firmly 50, ears forward. With the snake in her sight, she was no longer worried.

I have heard that horses have a better sense of 51 than dogs. I hadn't seen it 52 before that moment. 53, while we waited in reality for just a second or two—but for what felt like a century—the snake awoke and glided calmly off into the bush.

Holly then 54, leading the horses with caution and care. She had been alert to danger and had been 55 for the safety of us all. Following in the footsteps of their lead mare, not one of the other horses showed any fear.

第二节 (共 10 小题; 每小题 1.5 分, 满分 15 分)

阅读下面短文, 在空白处填入 1 个适当的单词或括号内单词的正确形式。

If you have not heard of Yangshi Lei, the 56 (honour) name of the Lei family responsible for imperial architecture during the Qing Dynasty, then you have missed an important detail about the Temple of Heaven, the Summer Palace and Yuanmingyuan Garden.

All the above great cultural relics and popular tourist attractions have been included on UNESCO's World Heritage List, 57 surprisingly enough, they are all designed by the Lei family. 58 (represent) the great achievements of science and technology in ancient China, their architectural practice covered a wide range of city planning, imperial palaces, gardens, temples, princes' residences and schools.

Yangshi 59 (refer) to architect or architecture in Chinese. Yangshifang, the then government authority similar to the National Architecture Design Institute today, was in charge of site 60 (select), design and construction of imperial architectures. 61 (amaze), eight generations of the Lei family were appointed director of Yangshifang consecutively from 1662 to 1911.

With so many architectural 62 (work) on the UNESCO's World Heritage List, the Lei Family is 63 unique phenomenon in the architectural history throughout the world. Apart from the grand architectures, China has another treasure left by the Lei family—design drafts. In the National Library of China alone, there 64 (be) up to 20,000 architectural design drafts, each of 65 plays an important role in the research of the history of the Qing Dynasty and how architecture developed at the time.

阅读下面材料，根据其内容和所给段落开头语续写两段，使之构成一篇完整的短文。

Missy was absolutely my best friend in the whole world. We had known each other since first grade, and we literally did everything together. We frequently visited each other's homes, we knew each other's families like they were our own. The interesting thing about our relationship, however the fact was that the older we got, the more our values seemed to differ. We still enjoyed a lot of the same things, but I was a bit more settled while she loved being associated with popular people and things. Although she was basically a good person, she had no problem with forcing things to go her way.

Perhaps this is why it seemed that her family actually trusted me more than they trusted her. So, on the day when Missy showed up at my house with a huge dent (凹痕) in her father's car, I knew that we were in for a troublesome time.

She had banged the car into a tree while out that day, and she knew her father was going to have an explanation. So she stopped by my house in order to make up a story that would lessen her father's rage. Missy decided to tell him that while in a parking lot, someone must have backed into the car and dented it. Looking at the dent with some crashed leaves and bark still sticking there, I attempted to perish (打消) her thought, "I don't think your father will buy it." "Don't worry," she insisted, "even if my dad doesn't trust me, he'll trust you." My role was to confirm for her. Now keep in mind that I had strong objections to lying and I wanted absolutely nothing to do with the situation. I loved her parents just like my own, and I did not want to be a party to this lie that Missy was creating. Nevertheless, after much request and a general questioning of my loyalty to our friendship, I decided that the least I could do was to act as a silent witness. That way, I wasn't actually lying; I just wasn't telling the full truth.

注意：1. 续写词数应为 150 左右；

2. 请按如下格式在答题卡的相应位置作答。

An hour or so later, we presented Missy's father with the car and the inquiry began.

Her father looked at me with great disbelief.
