Dear Chris,

Thank you for submitting your article to our "Global Voices" column. Although the submission deadline has already passed, I am delighted to inform you that we have decided to make an exception and include your piece in this current issue.

Two primary factors lie behind this decision. Above all, your article offers such a refreshing cross-cultural perspective that it fits perfectly with the core theme of "Global Voices". Rarely do we come across a piece of such high quality, and leaving it out would be a great loss to our readers. Additionally, since our layout team is still in the final stage of proofreading, we managed to adjust the page design slightly to make room for your work.

Thank you again for your wonderful contribution, though we kindly hope you can submit your work before the deadline next time.

Yours,

Li Hua

Possible Version 2

Dear Chris,

Thank you for submitting your article to our "Global Voices" column. I was genuinely impressed by your insightful perspectives and fluent writing. However, much as I admire your work, I regret to inform you that we are unable to include it in this current issue.

Please allow me to explain the reasons behind this decision. Primarily, since the submission deadline passed two days ago, all the pages for this issue have already been finalized and sent to the printing press, leaving no room for any last-minute additions. Furthermore, sticking strictly to the deadline is necessary to ensure fairness to all contributors who submitted their articles on time.

Nevertheless, given the exceptional quality of your article, we would love to feature it as the lead story in our next issue. Please let us know if this arrangement works for you.

Yours,

Li Hua

第二节（满分25分）

Possible Version

I overheard Mac ask Bayleigh, "Will he ever be able to climb the stairs?" For a brief moment, Bayleigh lowered her gaze, as if the question had touched a sore spot in her heart. Gently stroking Popcorn's soft orange fur, she looked up with a spark of determination. "No one gets to decide what he can't do," she said firmly, echoing the very words I had raised her with. Sitting on the third step, she waved his favorite feather toy to guide him up. Popcorn approached the stairs and lifted a trembling paw, but lost his balance and tumbled backward onto the floor. With a soft meow, he struggled to his feet and tried again. Step by shaky step, encouraged by Bayleigh's cheering, Popcorn finally reached the top stair, purring proudly in her lap.

Watching Popcorn master the new skill seemed to awaken something in Bayleigh. If a tiny, unsteady kitten could face falls without fear or shame, so could she. The next afternoon, instead of standing by the window watching the neighborhood children as usual, Bayleigh walked straight outside and wheeled out her adapted bike. My breath caught as she got on the seat and pedaled down the street toward the other kids. A few curious glances came her way, making her hands tighten on the handlebars, yet she didn't turn back. Offering a shy smile, she called out, "Mind if I ride with you?" Within minutes, she was riding happily alongside them, her bright laughter filling the air. Popcorn hadn't just climbed the stairs; he had given my daughter the courage to step into the world.

Text 1

M: Hello, this is Room 302. (1) Could I get a taxi to the airport at six tomorrow morning?

W: Certainly, sir. I'll book one for you right now. Would you like a wake-up call as well?

Text 2

W: Is Kevin still on the school basketball team?

M: Not this year. (2) He hurt his knee in the summer, so he's helping the coach with training instead.

Text 3

W: (3) Could you check the pressure in the front tires? And the engine light came on this morning.

M: Sure. I'll run a quick check. It'll take about half an hour, if you'd like to wait inside.

Text 4

M: I've read this paragraph three times and it still makes no sense to me.

W: You've been at it since lunch, Tom. (4) Why don't you go for a walk and come back to it later?

Text 5

W: Mr. Chen, could you sign these letters before you leave? The post goes out at four.

M: Just leave them on my desk. (5) And could you move my three o'clock meeting to tomorrow?

Text 6

W: Morning, Leo. You look half asleep.

M: (6) I stayed up till two finishing a video for my cousin's wedding. I filmed the whole ceremony last weekend.

W: That's sweet of you. Are you doing this as a job now?

M: Not really. (7) I just enjoy putting clips together. My cousin offered to pay me, but I told her a dinner would do.

W: You should charge next time. People pay good money for wedding videos.

M: Maybe one day. For now, it's just for fun.

Text 7

W: Good morning. I'd like to rent a bike for today.

M: Sure. (8) It's 20 yuan an hour, or 60 for the whole day.

W: The whole day, please. (9) I want to ride along the old city wall and then see the Bell Tower.

M: Nice choice. The wall is about 14 kilometers all the way round. Do you want a lock? It's free.

W: Yes, please. Do I need to leave anything with you?

M: Just your ID card. (10) You'll get it back when you return the bike. We close at seven.

W: Seven, got it. Is there somewhere safe to leave the bike near the Bell Tower?

M: There's a bike park right by the North Gate. Here's a map. I've marked it for you.

W: Perfect. Thanks a lot.

Text 8

M: Welcome back. My guest today is Rachel Kim, who runs something called a tool library in Bristol. Rachel, what is it?

W: It works just like a normal library, except you borrow drills and ladders instead of books. Most people use a drill for ten minutes a year, so why own one?

M: How did it all begin?

W: (11) Three years ago, I was clearing out my grandfather's old house and found five drills. I put a note online offering to lend them out, and within a week forty people had replied. That's when I knew there was a need.

M: And today?

W: We have 2,000 members and 600 tools, and we run repair workshops on Saturdays. (12) The workshops are my favorite part, though. Watching someone fix a chair they were about to throw away never gets old.

M: Rachel, thank you. (13) Now let's take a call. Tom in Leeds is on the line, and he's been a member since day one. Tom, are you there?

Text 9

W: Daniel, have you heard back from Ms. Ward about the charity run?

M: Yes. She's happy with Saturday the 14th, but she wants us to move the start from the sports field to the park. (14) The field is being repaired.

W: The park? (15) Then we'll need to ask the city council first, and that takes at least two weeks.

M: I know. I've already sent in the form. Anna's cousin works there, and she says it goes through faster if you phone them as well.

W: Good. What about the water stations? Last year we ran out halfway.

M: I've ordered twice as many bottles this time. And the sports shop on King Street has agreed to give us the prizes. They just want their name on the posters.

W: That's fair. (16) I'll add it tonight when I design them.

M: Great, Lucy. Then I'll take care of the sign-up list.

Text 10

M: Good afternoon, everyone. This is our last meeting before the exchange trip to Chengdu. We fly out on the 8th and come back on the 18th. (17) That's ten days in total, two more than last year's trip. For the first three nights, you'll stay in the school's guest house. After that, you'll move in with a host family. Your families have already written to you, and I expect every one of you to reply before Friday. Now, the program. Mornings are for Chinese lessons. (18) Afternoons are for visits: the panda base on Wednesday, a Sichuan opera on Thursday, where you'll see face-changing, and a cooking lesson on Friday. One warning: the food is spicy. (19) If you can't take hot food, tell your host family early rather than leaving your plate untouched. That would be considered rude. Finally, pack light. Each family will lend you a bike. (20) Most families live on the fifth or sixth floor, and there is no lift. Any questions? Then let's hand out your name cards.
